Question - 1:

Please let me know about Datastage TX (Mercator) and what are EDI mappings. Id appreciate if u can give me a clear view or direct me to a link where i can find the info?

Ans:

Datastage TX(Mercator) is now owned by IBM, and has been incorporated into the Webshpere Suite:

http://ibm.ascential.com/products/webshpere_datastage_tx.html

Though the info there is very generic,

I don't know of a 'clear view' on your question, but basically the Mercator product (as it was known) creates binaries that, in conjunction with an execution engine (somewhat like java byte codes and JVM) that are called Maps. When we say 'Mapping' we mean to define relationships between input and output objects, and in conjunction with additional commands (rules) build one or many outputs, from one or many inputs - each of which can be flat files, databases, message queues etc.

So Mapping is basically to defined the rules, to transform from A to B, and create a 'Map' which can then be executed to actually do the job.

EDI (as you probably know) as well as being a generic term for electronic data interchange, there are also specific EDI standards. From Memory there were ones called (I think) Tradacoms and Tradanet as well as others.

What Mercator also supplies are data structures(these are known as Type Trees) that adhere to these standards, so if you need to send data through these networks the input/output to them is already defined, your job would be to map (match the fields) from your system to the appropriate ones in the EDI structures.

There are also similar type trees for Banking Standards (SWIFT For example), and has importers to define the same for XML schemas and SAP Idocs

Question - 6:

I really want to ask if i eligible for tcs. i have completed my b.e.it 2006. my total aggregate is 58%. and 7&8th sem aggregate is 64%. (they have asked an aggregate of 60% in the graduation but i think it would be including all sem marks) i had applied for tcs with the graduation aggregate i.e. 64%. i have cleared my apti now have interview remaining. Will i be allowed. will they check my aggregate at the interview

Ans:

Well , basically they look for an aggregate of 60% without backlogs .. You have mentioned that you have cleared the aptitude.. Thats gud.. Prepare for the Tech and Managerial rounds .. if you can crack in the leftout rounds .. i think they will consider you.. But for now , i would suggest go ahead with the interviews.. later on every thing will be ok..

Question - 19:

I am in T.Y.B.Sc.(I.T.). from the Mumbai university. I am not able to complete my graduation since the year 2004. The problem is that I am not able to complete the paper in time. Now I am very much afraid of examination. My concepts are clear before the Exam. But when I go for the same at the hall,I forget every thing. But still

I want to myself to be in an I.T. field. Is there any career after the completion? What are the future prospects? Should I do a DAC course from CDAC? Or should I do S.C.J.P.? Or should I go for SAP-ABAP? which of the courses can i be able to do?

Ans:

I would suggest you to first finish your graduation. Don't have the feeling that you will forget every thing. While reading make a note of points of important concepts and terms in each chapter and just read that once in the morning when you have your exam. This would help you to recollect just the important points afresh in mind before you go for the exam. You can do SAP course and this has a very good market. All the Best.

Question - 21:

Guide me what should i do after my mechanical engineering, should i do MBA or should i gain some experience after my engineering and then go for MBA, what is the scope of doing post graduation in engineering (M.Tech, Msc)?

Ans:

It is not necessary that you should gain some experience and then go for MBA. MBA can be pursued part-time, while at the same time you can get some hands-on experience right after engineering. So it going to be earning and studying both, In case you cannot cope two-in-one, then you may have to opt for full-time MBA. Getting M.Tech will take little more time, if you are willing and can manage without job and can concentrate fully on studies, you can opt for M.Tech.

How to take a dump of Web Intelligence reports? Because I want to send reports with code Z(all operations like filters, alerters) to client. How can i do this?

Ans:

Now to do this :

create any simple webi report using efashion demo universe.

save it; go to cmc and check the path of this .wid file from input;

go to that path;

copy the name of .wid file;

now rename your clients file with that name.

now your clients .wid file has the name of the .wid file of the webi document which u created using efashion.

now copy this file - and paste it into the input frs path; so you r just replacing the files with the id.

just login into infoview; click open the same file which you created;

it will show you your client report which you have replaced.

this is the way to manually migrate and test your reports - from one environment to another.
