Question - 9:

Why should I hire you as Medical doctor?

Ans:

This is one of the last questions that you might hear in the interview. If you do hear it, you are probably doing well. It is important to not overqualify yourself with your answer to this question. Try to highlight why you would be the only candidate who would fit the position.

View All Answers

Question - 10:

Why are you interested in this position?

Ans:

This is likely one of the first questions a candidate might be asked. Most candidates see success when they highlight the facility and the surrounding area. Talk about why you want to be in that city (Is it the size of the city? Cost of living? The people? Quality schools for your kids? No income tax?) and what is unique about the facility (Size? Renowned doctors? The facility culture?). This is a subjective question, but try to answer succinctly and get to the point quickly.

Question - 11:

What kind of salary are you looking for?

Ans:

If you say a number that is too high for the hospital, you might be taking yourself out of the race. If you give them a number that is low, you are either leaving money on the table or you are giving the interviewer the impression that you are worth less than the next candidate.

I am looking for at least a competitive salary; I definitely want to receive compensation equal to the effort put forth.

View All Answers

Question - 12:

What are your goals and objectives?

Ans:

Think of this question in terms of what the interviewer wants to hear. Try to phrase your goals and objectives to be in alignment with the position for which you are interviewing.

I want to build a solid practice, provide consistent quality care for my patients and be part of the team.

Question - 14:

How do you react under pressure?

Ans:

Most physician specialties require brilliance in the heat of the moment. Highlight your ability to rise to the occasion when it is necessary.

View All Answers

Question - 15:

Where do you see yourself in five to ten years?

Ans:

This question is subjective. If you are a locum tenens physician, your answer is going to be different from other physicians' answers. We recommend that you answer honestly. If you plan on entering retirement in the next five to 10 years, tell the interviewer. It is the most fair to both parties. In some cases, it is even okay to say that you don't know.

View All Answers

Question - 16:

What would you bring to the practice?

Ans:

I would bring a solid work ethic to the practice, a desire to be part of the team and the ability to provide quality care.

If I receive palliative or hospice care, will I still be able to see my personal doctor?

Ans:

Absolutely. Your palliative doctor coordinates care with your other doctors and helps you navigate the often-complex healthcare system.

View All Answers

Question - 19:

Shouldn't all my doctors be concerned with alleviating my suffering and improving my quality of life?

Ans:

Yes, of course. But palliative doctors have special training and expertise in pain management and symptom control, and specialize in helping patients and their families cope with the many burdens of a serious illness, from the side effects of a medical treatment to caregiver stress to fears about the future. Palliative doctors can assist you with difficult medical decisions, helping you weigh the pros and cons of various treatments.

View All Answers

Question - 20:

What does a palliative doctor do that's different from what my other doctors do?

Ans:

Your other doctors focus on your general health or treating your disease or condition. Palliative doctors concentrate on preventing and alleviating suffering, improving your quality of life, and helping you and your loved ones cope with the stress and burden of your illness.

View All Answers
