Social Worker Interview Questions And Answers Guide.

Question - 1:

Why is role-play important?

Ans:

Role-plays have become very popular in all sort of job interviews. Social work is no exception. Especially in private institutions, interviewers use it pretty often. It is also quite common in agency recruitment. The interviewer plays a client (or brings one to the room), and you need to "perform your job" straight there. The guide on how to ace a role play exceeds the content of the free part of this website. However, I can give you at least few hints:

* Be yourself. Do not try to be a different man, just adjust your behavior a little to the situation.

* Accept the role play. Some people refuse it in an interview. It is a big mistake. If you refuse to do the role play, they won't give you a job.

* Take it seriously. I know it is only a play. But anyway, you should take it as seriously as ever, because it is a part of your interview. And many times it is the most important part of the process Do not forget on it.

Question - 2:

Are you prepared to make home visits?

Ans:

There are a lot of expectations on a social worker. You may need to work overtime, on Sundays, or even make home visits. Of course, this depends on the nature of your job, but it is almost necessary to do it in direct social practice.

Some social workers are on duty 24/7, e.g nurses who live with the clients. This is something many people can not even imagine. However, you should declare that fulfilling your goal as a social worker is the first priority and that you are ready to sacrifice something for achieving it.

I am prepared to make home visits. I understand the importance of getting closer to the client. I have experience with it from the past and have no problem with it. What more, I have a car, so I can definitely make home visits.

Question - 3:

If a client did not understand even a simple language you use, What would you do?

Ans:

It is a technical question about a difficult situation you can face while performing your daily job. You can expect several questions of this type in an interview, mostly related to the particular job you want to have. Sometimes they can even put you under direct test, bringing a client in a room, or playing one. This is actually one of the best assessments of your readiness to do the job.

First of all, as a good social worker you need to be patient. You should not get distracted by it. You should stay calm and try to find an alternative way of communication.

One way to communicate is to go by an example. If you want your client to do something, but he does not understand it, demonstrate it. Show him what you expect him to do. Do it and he may repeat it.

To use pictures, gestures, and other forms of transferring your message is also something to mention. However, the most important part of your answer is the one when you mention that you would stay calm and communicate your message until the client finally understands it.

Question - 4:

How to Be as they are?

Ans:

The problem of many social workers is that they stand out from the crowd too much If you come among-st poor children wearing a business suit, you will hardly get close to their hearts. You may get an attention, but that isn't really what you seek. They will not respect you, they will feel a distance between you two. It is like inviting a homeless man to your beautiful office, just to take a questionnaire.

I would go into their habitat, I would try to understand their language, think on the same wavelength as they do. I wouldn't try to present myself as someone clever, but rather act as one of them, wear things they wear and speak the way they do. That is how I would try to get closer to them.

Question - 5:

How would you get closer to our target group?

Ans:

Social work is not something one can do effectively while keeping distance. As a good candidate, you should always try to get as close to the people as possible. Close to their bodies, close to their hearts, close to their problems. This is the only way how to do this job well and you should know it and have a plan how to do it.

Question - 6:

What is your opinion about young generation?

Ans:

In most of the cases, social work is connected to specific demographic and sociographic group of people. You may work with orphans, problematic youngsters, old people, homeless people, immigrants. There are numerous social groups that definitely need our help.

It doesn't matter what they ask, you should be always positive. Positive about people, positive about options to help, positive about your job. That is the right attitude to present in an interview. Oppositely, if you spoke in negative terms, they would not hire you. One can hardly do this job well, if he does not believe it or do not have some respect for people who should work with.

Question - 7:

Suppose if you have no experience then what to do?

Ans:

In this case, you should talk about your volunteering experience, or at least about some situation when you did something more than expected. It can be anything you did for free too.

Do not forget that in social work, your attitude is the most important thing. If it is correct, they can hire you, even if you have no experience with social work. Show the right attitude and get a job!

Question - 8:

Describe a situation when you did something more than expected from you as a social worker?

Ans:

* Helping someone who is NOT your client, but needs quality help from someone with your qualification.

* Offer and deliver a service that is outside of your working duties (for example shopping for someone, taking someone to physician, going for a vacation with someone, etc).

* Meeting with clients in your free time, in order to strengthen mutual relationship.

* Helping new colleagues in work.

Question - 9:

Does arguments can hardly solve anything?

Ans:

You can not solve the problem by arguing with your client. You probably knew this already. Oppositely, as a good social worker, you should stay calm and relaxed, keep your focus and goal on your mind and do not let their behavior to distract you. Remember, your goal is to build bridges, not to destroy it.

Question - 10:

Think of a talk you had with an angry client. How did you handle it?

Ans:

Social workers meet with different kinds of clients. They often struggle in life, face problems and are unsatisfied with everything around them. (That is the reason why they need your help).

Being overwhelmed by their own problems, they can be aggressive, angry, sad, irate, or whatever else comes to your mind. Some clients are nice, but many are not. As a social worker you need to handle all the people and all the problematic situations. That is why you will be inquired how you dealt with such clients in the past.

Notice that it is a behavioral question. Recruiters ask what you did, not what you would do. Therefore you should speak about a situation from the past, ideally from your job. But if it is your first job application, you can calmly talk about experiences from your personal life.

Question - 11:

How to show your efforts to improve your weaknesses?

Ans:

Every job candidate has some weaknesses. There does not exist something like an ideal applicant for a job. We all have our weak spots. However, the difference between average and exceptional people is an effort to improve on their weaknesses. If you honestly describe your weaknesses and explain the recruiters your efforts to improve on it, it will be the best possible answer.

Question - 12:

What are the weaknesses of social worker?

Ans:

What isn't your strength, doesn't have to be a weakness for social work. While some of us have excellent communication skills, many of us are average in communication. But is still enough for a job in social sphere. And even if your communication skills, or your level of responsibility, is bad, you should never mention it in your answer. It's just too important. You should rather choose a weakness that is not so important, or one that can be considered as a strength by some employers. To such weaknesses belong:

- * Being over-friendly
- * Being impatient sometimes
- * Being too punctual
- * Having your own opinion always
- * Not being able to take decision independently

Question - 13:

What are the strengths of social workers?

Ans:

Many abilities characterize a good employee in this field. Look at the list below:

- * Good communication skills
- * Understanding for the problems and needs of the others
- * Ability to solve conflict situations
- * Passion for work
- * Creative personality
- * No fear
- * High level of responsibility
- * Detail oriented personality
- * Good listening skills

All of these are good, but for some fields of social work some strengths are more important than the others. You should think about it yourself and pick one or two to talk about in an interview.

View All Answers

Question - 14:

What do you consider to be your strengths and weaknesses as a Social Worker?

Ans:

One ability can represent a strength for one job and a weakness for another position. You should understand what the right strengths and the biggest weaknesses for this job are. Once you understand it, you can prepare your answer to this question.

Question - 15:

Why did you decide for this specific field of Social Work?

Ans:

We all have some preferences. Someone likes vanilla ice cream, while someone else prefers strawberry one. It is the same with people. Some of us like to work with children, while some of us prefer to work with alcoholics. Some individuals with special motivation even choose groups such as drug addicts or homeless people. Recruiters try to find out why you are interested in specific field of social work. In a good answer, you should simply state that you feel close to the target group or to the job itself. To give a specific reason, such as personal experience, is a great idea too.

Question - 16:

What do you hope to accomplish as a Social Worker?

Ans:

I am very proud on all the people who decide to work in social sphere. You should be proud on yourself too, proud on your goals and good intentions you have in life. Do not be afraid to talk about it in an interview. Show them that your heart is on a right place and that you believe that social work is important in modern-day society. You want to help the others, that is the reason of your choice.

Question - 17:

What are your writing and speaking skills while talking with peers and clients?

Ans:

Writing reports and talking with peers and clients are integral skills needed to be successful in the field of social work and sometimes difficult to gauge in a simple interview. Answer questions about your technical skills with more examples of how you engaged a group of mothers to form a support network and spoke at their annual volunteer recognition dinner. Carry copies of newsletter articles you wrote for your previous employer or for a group with whom you volunteer. Refer to your exceptional grades in English and public speaking at school as well as your ongoing participation in continuing education courses to improve your writing and speaking skills. Include references to professional groups that you belong to and the committee work you do with those groups, as well as any positions you hold within the organization, to further highlight your commitment to self-improvement and to your career.

Question - 18:

How do you handle stress as Social Worker?

Ans:

High caseloads and troubled clients can create enormous stress for social workers. Managers need to know they have competent, well-adjusted employees on hand who don't fall apart when crises occur. Talk about your belief in balance and your talents at being able to create environments free of stress in your home. Highlight your extracurricular activities such as playing an instrument or running and tell the recruiter the importance of your health to your overall mental well-being. Explain that you eat well, sleep and rest at night and can get others to breathe deeply and change directions when they get stressed out. Provide an example of when you applied your relaxation techniques with clients and the results of your intervention.

Question - 19:

Why Should We Hire You as a Social Worker?

Ans:

You may have the requisite degrees and licenses needed for the job, but so do other candidates. Recruiters want to ensure that you'll fit in with the culture of the organization. For this question, you want to highlight your communication skills by talking about the various teams you worked on at your last job or how you lead an outreach committee; include outcomes from your past experiences. Present a story about an outreach campaign you initiated and how it resulted in an increase in community support. Give specific examples of how you worked with your peers and how well projects turned out. Reference your research into the agency and assure the recruiter that the company goals and mission statement precisely align with your own beliefs and values.
