Question - 2:

Why avoid using "I" in resume objective?

Ans:

Resume objectives should be written in third person. Too many people draft objectives that are written in first person, and this is entirely too informal for a resume. Keep in mind that your resume is a formal business document that should accurately reflect the level of professionalism that is appropriate for the type of job you hope to get.

Question - 3:

Why don't focus on "how you will benefit" in Resume Objective?

Ans:

Remember that the purpose of writing a resume is to sell yourself to an employer. Don't write a resume objective that focuses on how you will benefit from the job. Avoid objectives that include phrases like "improve my skills", "gain more experience", or "put my education to work". Instead, focus on the type of work that you want to do. After all, employers hire people to perform work, so it makes sense that your resume should reflect your eagerness to seek employment performing the types of tasks they need help with.

Question - 4:

How to make sure that objective isn't too long?

Ans:

A resume objective should be a single sentence. Some people make the mistake of creating statements that are between two and five sentences, which is entirely too long. The objective statement should be short and to the point, leaving the rest of the space on the resume to highlight what you have to offer as an employee.

Question - 5:

List some tips for writing resume objective statement?

Ans:

- * Focus on how you would benefit the employer, not on how the employer would benefit you. Stay away from resume objectives that state your working preferences, such as "seeking a team-oriented environment that fosters professional development."
- * Don't be vague. Steer clear from statements that say nothing substantial about your career goal (e.g., "seeking a challenging position with potential for growth and advancement").
- * Keep it concise and targeted. Hiring managers often sort through hundreds to thousands of resumes to fill one job opening. Make it easy on them by keeping your objective short and to the point. The best resume objectives contain a desired job title or target.
- * If you have more than one career goal, create a different resume version for each objective. Remember, you can store up to five resumes on Monster.
