Forensic Audit Interview Questions And Answers Guide.

Question - 1:

Tell me what attracts candidates to this role?

Ans:

One particularly fascinating aspect of the job is how finance and accounting work hand-in-hand with the real-life decisions people make. I enjoy the variety that comes with working in multiple industries, as well as the challenge of solving financial "mysteries." The job can get exciting at times. While I worked for the FBI, I handled cases involving drug dealers, organized crime, terrorists and Wall Street professionals.

Question - 2:

Explain me was the decision to move forward with the forensic audit unanimous?

Ans:

This decision was not unanimous - some board members objected to the $1 million price tag for the audit, while the majority believed it was difficult for the district to move forward until all outstanding questions had been answered.

Question - 3:

Tell me when is the final forensic audit expected to be released?

Ans:

A draft of the final report is expected on August 30th, 2017. However, this timeline is fluid depending on how cooperative the District and its vendors are with VLS. At the Clay Subcommittee meeting on June 23rd, 2017 it was reported that some vendors were being uncooperative and were "lawyering up."

Question - 4:

Tell me who is conducting the forensic audit?

Ans:

The school board hired the forensic auditing firm Vicenti, Lloyd & Stutzman (VLS) to conduct the audit. This firm was hired from among a few applicants - VLS received the recommendation of the Citizens Bond Oversight Committee.

Question - 5:

What is certified in Financial Forensics (CFF)?

Ans:

This certification is granted by the American Institute of Certified Public Accountants (AICPA) to Certified Public Accountants (CPAs) who have developed expertise in the forensic accounting field. This is an additional accreditation you may wish to consider in addition to having a CPA license.

Question - 6:

Do you know what findings has the forensic audit had so far?

Ans:

An early "Phase 1" of the forensic audit was released in January 2016. This phase found 36 out of 51 areas of the bond program were at "high risk" for fraud. VLS stated that their early findings showed "disdain from the top for internal controls." These findings did not, however, prove any fraud occurred. That determination can only be found through the "Phase 2" work, which is currently underway.

Question - 7:

What is certified Fraud Examiner (CFE)?

Ans:

The CFE is a globally recognized professional designation for individuals who specialize in fraud prevention, detection and deterrence. It is offered by the Association of Fraud Examiners (ACFE). CFEs exhibit proficiency and professional excellence in performing services to uncover fraud and implement internal controls and systems to prevent them from occurring.

Question - 9:

Explain me what should someone thinking about this career know?

Ans:

This job will keep you on your toes. There really isn't a typical day in forensic accounting. Some days you may be crunching numbers, some days you might be conducting interviews, while others you may be reviewing documents. Additionally, you have to stay on top of the financial industry and markets to know how changes, such as new or updated mandates in regulatory compliance, can affect the finances of a company or individual. Regardless of the purpose of your engagement - civil or criminal - it's usually all about following the money.

Question - 19:

Explain me the process of locating the financial information you need for a specific case?

Ans:

In my work, I have to take a unique approach to each case. Rather than taking a standardized approach to finding information, the key is to locate the people or organizations that will have the right data. In the case of fraud, for instance, it means tracking out where that individual organization is likely to conceal information. This sometimes requires thinking outside of the box or trying to put myself in the situation of the person. He or she might be hiding assets in another account or with relatives, as happened in one case I dealt with. In each situation, I need to zero in on what is required and what that person or company might do.

Question - 20:

What Forensic Accountants Do?

Ans:

Due to the recent cases of fraud and finance related crimes, the need for fraud deterrence and detection has been intensified. This is the reason forensic accounting continues to enjoy a rapidly increasing popularity in the world of business and finance.

Forensic accountants perform two main types of services: investigation and litigation support.

Investigation involves the examination of potential and actual evidences that could suggest the existence of fraudulent activities and the pertinent information associated in them.

In litigation support, forensic accountants provide assistance in a given case, primarily related to the calculation or estimation of economic damages and related issues. Forensic accountants also present evidences and act as expert witnesses in court rooms where they provide valuable points that are useful in deciding over fraud and related cases.

Question - 21:

Tell me have you or are you prepared to appear in court as a witness? What skills did you bring to that situation?

Ans:

I have appeared as an expert witness in a bankruptcy case. It is essential to have all of the information needed, so I had to look specifically into all the details required, including all of the assets listed, accounts, financial records and other matters. It is also necessary to do a thorough investigation to ensure all parties are providing up-to-date and accurate data. In addition, I am aware of the need to communicate information precisely in the courtroom setting and how crucial it is to be clear under a substantial amount of pressure.

Question - 22:

Tell me what's the difference between forensic accounting and auditing?

Ans:

While the two may seem similar, a forensic accountant actually uses auditing as part of his or her process. Forensic accounting is an investigative methodology to follow the money or the proceeds, conducted under the premise that the results may be utilized in a court of law.

Question - 24:

What is Forensic Accounting?

Ans:

You have encountered the two terms before, separately at least; and never have you imagined that they can be put beside each other.

It is kind of weird when you think of private investigators in a crime scene all holding calculators instead of magnifiers and cameras. And it's even weird to see a bookkeeper trying to prepare quarterly financial statements with knives and elastic gloves! Well, the term is really not that troublesome.

The term "forensic" means "relating to courts of justice or public disputes" or "suitable for use in a court of law". Forensic accounting involves the use of accounting expertise in court and litigation cases, fraud investigation, claims and dispute resolution, and other areas that involve legal matters.

Unlike the popularly dramatic forensic setting that focuses on extraction of DNA and bullet trajectory calculation, forensic accounting deals with financial and corporate crimes such as fraud.

Question - 25:

Tell me why was a forensic audit started?

Ans:

There have long been questions about potential fiscal mismanagement and fraud regarding WCCUSD's $1.6 billion bond program, leading to a grand jury investigation and an ongoing SEC and FBI investigation. In the spring of 2015, Dennis Clay, a project analyst with the District for 11 years who worked on the bond program, came forward as a whistleblower alleging tens of millions of dollars of mismanagement and providing documentation to support his claim. These allegations led the School Board to establish the Dennis Clay Subcommittee and to hire a forensic auditing firm.

Question - 26:

What is a forensic audit?

Ans:

A forensic audit is an independent financial investigation that is designed to look for concrete evidence of fraud or mishandling of funds. Simple financial audits only evaluate whether an organization's financial statements fairly and transparently represent its financial standing. A forensic audit goes several steps further to trace the chain of funds and uncover possible fraud. This is similar to the purpose of a forensic criminal investigation. Because of the depth of a forensic audit investigation, its findings are admissible in civil court as evidence.

Question - 27:

How do you conduct an investigation of a company, for instance?

Ans:

In one case I was involved in, we did a complete surveillance of the premises after the CEO of a major company said he suspected there was a misappropriation of funds occurring. The surveillance cameras showed employees concealing tools, materials and other items. We could have stopped there, but in my experience, if there is one type of irregularity, there are usually others. I looked at the records thoroughly and found a number of other issues, including employees who were illegals as well as missing funds. As a result, we were able to uncover a plethora of issues occurring at the business and enable to company to prosecute those responsible for the missing items and funds.

Question - 28:

Tell me what do you need to succeed in financial accounting jobs?

Ans:

First, you need to have a desire to investigate. Naturally, you're also going to need a degree and background in accounting and finance. While you don't have to be a CPA for this role, having that expertise could set you apart from the competition when you're applying for jobs, especially if you also have a background in investigation.
