Question - 1:

Tell me how do you prefer to communicate with leads?

Ans:

The culture of your brokerage should play into this question. If your brokerage is located in a small town, maybe phone calls work best. If your brokerage is in a large city, maybe text messages or emails are preferred. Also consider what forms of communication match your agnets' client base best.

Question - 2:

Tell me will I be able to host open houses for other agents' listings?

Ans:

Some brokerages' associates work together as a team to offer open house hosting opportunities to newer agents in need of buyer leads. See if the company's agents pull together to provide opportunities like this to newbies.

Question - 3:

Tell me do you provide training?

Ans:

Newly licensed Realtors have specific training needs. They need to be provided with hands-on coaching on all elements of real estate business ownership, starting with the most elementary "best practices" as well as receive a thorough comprehension of contracts and forms. Mentorship programs, coupled with an extensive new agent training series, is usually the best way to provide a well-rounded education to newly licensed agents.

Question - 4:

Tell me what separates you from other Real Estate agents?

Ans:

This is the candidate's opportunity to shine. Look for those interviewees who really sell themselves and tell you why they'd be a great hire. Seek candidates that list more than just personality traits (i.e. a hard worker, or fast learner), but those who can provide examples from their previous work history that exemplify those traits.

Question - 6:

Tell me where and how do you provide advertising for the associates?

Ans:

Print advertising popularity is on the decline, so how is the company providing alternative ways to capture leads and route them back to you? Company-hosted lead capture websites, web and print marketing, floor time and open house availability all come into play to provide you with contacts. Keep in mind that ultimately, the most lucrative real estate businesses are built through referrals of personal friends, family and past clients and colleagues.

Question - 18:

Attitude Based Real Estate Broker Interview Questions:

Ans:

- * In a business such as real estate sales, a person must always be "up" and "people-oriented" to be effective. Even in the interview with prospective companies the person interviewing you will look for such things as ability to communicate, positive attitude and neat appearance. People who become successful are generally those who genuinely like people and want to assist them in solving a problem (selling their house or finding that "dream" home).
- * These "successful" people also carry the attitude not of "I have to go to work", but rather "I want to go to work!" It's all in the outlook you have!!
- * When setting up an appointment with a prospective company, plan to find out not only what that company is going to give you, but how you can help make the company stronger by your efforts!
- * These "Hogan School's 70 Most Important Questions" will enable you to go in to your interview with confidence. Also, add some questions of your own to this list.

 * Most companies do not require a resume, however, a well prepared resume and cover letter, even if work experience is small, indicates professionalism and attention to detail.
- * Be pleased when the company screens you well and expects more than a "body" and license from you! A selective company will work harder with you and for you to make you a stronger more professional person!
- * What to wear to the Interview!
- * Look professional! Quiet, good taste is an important part of dress.
- * Men: Collared shirt (tie optional), slacks & sports coat.
- * Women: Nice suit, pantsuit or tailored dress.

Question - 22:

Tell me what is your commission split schedule?

Ans:

Each company will have its own guidelines governing the way commission is split between agents and brokers. New agents typically receive a smaller split because they require more help from their broker. Your commission split should become greater as you sell more homes and become more independent. There is room to negotiate here, however. Point out to the broker any reasons why you might be more valuable than the typical new agent-maybe you have a large contact list from a previous job to draw on, or you have a successful track record in another sales position.

Question - 23:

Tell me does this office work as a team, or does each agent operate pretty well on their own?

Ans:

This takes us back to the culture of the brokerage. Are the managers passionate about coaching? Do they take the time needed to train new agents exceedingly well? Perhaps the company thrives off of already-established agents with training and experience already under their belt, and the new agent training program isn't everything you need it to be. See if you can sit in on a training session and find out for yourself.

Question - 35:

Tell me what costs will I incur?

Anc.

Obtaining your license was the first step towards starting your career. In order to practice real estate sales, you typically need to join your local, state and national Boards or Associations of Realtors, gain access to your Multiple Listing Service, and obtain marketing elements. You may also need to enroll in an Errors and Omissions Insurance policy. The manager should be able to provide you with a breakdown of all costs you can anticipate before providing services as a Realtor.

Question - 41:

Tell me what commission level are you prepared to offer me?

Ans:

Do yourself a favor - don't ask about commission until the very end of the interview. Your commission split may be negotiable and dependent upon how the manager has determined what your business growth rate will likely look like in the next six to 12 months. Asking this question too soon in your interview can be detrimental; you may unknowingly set yourself up for disappointment when you force the manager to provide you with a low-risk response before either of you have a chance to understand what you can offer to each other.
