Question - 33:

Suppose we get a lot of irate and angry customers. How do you plan to deal with them?

Ans:

Any hotel or tourism institute worth its salt spends a lot of time teaching its students about dealing with tough customers. Checking your textbooks for answers is a good idea, but please do so before the interview takes place. If you know somebody in the industry, then it would be a good idea to speak to him or her and ask about how such situations are handled in the workplace. If you have time, then give an example or two about how you dealt with an angry or bad customer in the past with tact, politeness and firmness. Acknowledge that the approach taken with angry customers may depend on the style and formality of the institution, for example a five star hotel may have a different approach to a fast food café.

Question - 34:

Tell me how can you help other travel agents in dealing with customers?

Ans:

Travel agents can help each others. They are responsible to book flights, find the best deals, and plan vacations for the clients. It is important that you build excellent professional relationship with other travel agents of the same company. Remember that no one can work alone in this world. So, learn how to work efficiently in team because the job of travel consultant is going to give you a lot of challenges. Some more questions in the series are:

- * Do you know how to use computer systems for helping clients find the best deals?
- * How can you handle frustrated customers?
- * Are you a well-organized travel agent? If yes then prove it!
- * Do you enjoy traveling alone or with friends/family?
- * Have you ever booked a tour package through a travel company? How has been your experience?

It is just up to you that how you prepare yourself for some important and common questions like above. Here we would like to make it clear that it is not always that all these questions will be asked. There might be chances when the employer has already set another list of questions to be asked from the potential candidates. You need to prepare your mind for all types of questions that are related to your field.

Question - 35:

Suppose you have been asked to plan a business meeting or a party for some clients. How will you go about the task?

Ans:

This seems like a simple enough question, but it is more like a trick question. Many interviewees, either due to anxiety, or because of the overconfidence that comes from being asked such a simple question, mess this up by missing out an important step of the process. Think this out carefully, remember everything that you have been taught or have done and then answer this question slowly and methodically, convincing your interviewers that you can handle a situation under pressure well. Attention to detail is key in this industry, as well as following a brief accurately.

Here the interviewer is looking for passion and insight. With a question like this you have permission to be creative - have a bit of fun!

View All Answers

Question - 55:

Tell us how would you describe yourself?

Ans:

This is where the interviewer wants to get an idea about YOU as a person. Although you can mention your career strengths it is better to use this to talk about your personality. Whatever you say you need to be honest and genuine. You want the interviewer to feel confident that they are seeing your true personality rather than telling them what you think they want to hear.

Study the job specification carefully before you go to the travel job interview. Often the travel company, airline or hotel group will describe exactly the type of person they are looking for - organized, a team player, dedicated to delivering good service, friendly, positive-minded. If you fit what they want then make sure you say so. If you forget then you may be shooting yourself in the foot.

View All Answers

Question - 56:

Explain me why did you join the hotel and tourism sector?

Ans:

There are two things that you can touch upon as an answer to this question. The first relates to the statistics regarding the sector. Tell your interviewers that it is a dynamic sector that is growing at a rapid pace and you want to be in the middle of the boom, the excitement and the energy. However, before saying so, make sure that you have the required data to support your claims. What is the growth rate of the industry? What is the size of the industry? When did the boom start? Who says there is a boom? Basically, doing your homework well is advised. The other aspect that you should always touch upon as an answer to this question is how you and your personality are well suited to this sector. Convince the interviewers that you are made for the industry and the industry is made for you. Talking about basic traits like people skills, patience, ability to work under pressure etc, which are prerequisites to succeeding in the hospitality and tourism sector and how you excel at all these, should constitute a good answer.
