Infant & Toddler Specialist Interview Questions And Answers Guide.

Question - 1:

Tell us what was your inspiration to pick up a career as an infant teacher?

Ans:

I have always genuinely loved children, and was motivated to pick up this line of work, as I was convinced that making a difference in their lives was my forte. I took up special Montessori training, and have been working as an infant teacher ever since.

Question - 2:

Can you tell us why did you select teaching preschool as a career?

Ans:

Being a preschool teacher requires a true love for the field and working with kids. The interviewer is ensuring these are traits you possess. "Growing up I was the oldest of six brothers and sisters. Helping my mother to care for them gave me the skills to be a nurturer. I worked as a babysitter and in various child care centers before I became a teacher. I always found myself drawn to similar jobs. I developed a passion for working with kids and found I was quite skilled at it."

Question - 3:

Please explain what defines success for you as a preschool teacher?

Ans:

Children in their formative years require more out of a teacher than others. The interviewer wants to find out if you have any goals or takeaways for your preschoolers. "I have a few goals I aim to achieve that allow me to measure my success as well. First, my overall objective is to instill a positive attitude towards education.

"I have a few goals I aim to achieve that allow me to measure my success as well. First, my overall objective is to instill a positive attitude towards education. Second, I strive to build independence and confidence in my preschoolers so that they use their full potential. Lastly, I teach my students to celebrate their differences and interact positively with one another. If they walk away with at least a little of each aspect, then I feel as though I have succeeded in my role."

Question - 4:

Explain me how do you handle a behavioral problem in the classroom?

Ans:

As a preschool teacher, you must be prepared for children that will misbehave. Explain to the interviewer how you would handle such a situation. "Preschoolers are on the learning curve of distinguishing between right and wrong so I feel as though light reprimandation is adequate. As their teacher, it is my job to inform and help guide them. If a behavioral problem does arise, I typically put the child in time out. It's extremely crucial that parents are on board with my route of disciplinary action . Also, time out gives the child the opportunity to calm down and reflect on his or her misbehavior. After about five or so minutes, I would have a one-on-one discussion with the child about why they were removed from the group and how to make a better choice next time around."

Question - 5:

Explain me what was your most challenging day in the role of an infant teacher till now?

Ans:

To be honest, all days are challenging in their own way. However, there was a time when a child managed to lodge a grape in her throat, and an emergency was declared. Putting my first aid training into action, I managed to get her to throw it out. Those few moments were quite harrowing though! View All Answers

Question - 6:

Tell us as a daycare teacher assistant, what do you deem are three important duties that you will be responsible for?

Ans:

Basic care, supervision and instruction are the three most important duties that any daycare teacher performs.

Question - 7:

Explain me have you ever worked in a daycare where you had to handle children with special needs? What was your experience?

Ans:

I have been fortunate enough to work with several children with "special needs" as we insist on calling them. I find these children to be highly intelligent - they do not conform to ordinary channels of communication or instruction but their achievements surpass anything that I have ever seen.

Question - 8:

Explain me what makes you the best candidate for this position as Infant & Toddler Specialist?

Ans:

This is a loaded question! Of all your qualifications, state the ones that put you over the top. Although you need to maintain a professional demeanor throughout the interview, this question calls for your personal views on early childhood education and how you see yourself contributing to the program. When preparing for the interview, consider the following: Why did you choose the field of early childhood education? How dedicated are you to the young children you teach? How has the field affected your thinking, previous jobs, and life experiences? This is the last message you will share with interviewers, so be sure to give an answer that represents you as a unique individual.

Question - 9:

Please explain what part of being an early childhood teacher givesyou the most satisfaction? What part of doing this work is the most difficult for you?

Ans:

This question is a good way to get to know the person behind the application. It asks them to talk about how their personality interfaces with their work. Asking them about what provides satisfaction will help you understand what motivates them to do high quality and help you determine if the applicant is likely to find that satisfaction in your program. By asking them what's difficult for them, you may learn whether or not this candidate will be happy working in your program over a long period of time. You may determine that it's unlikely you could provide those things that give them the greatest satisfaction, or prevent things that are problematic for them. This question will help you determine if it's a good match or a good fit between what it is that you do, and what they need to be a productive and happy employee. This question may require you to press a little bit further. It's not enough for them to respond that they do this work "Because I love children." They need to elaborate on this and be specific about what aspects of their work are the most exciting. It's also interesting to note how much they respond to this question by separating out the child from the family context. How do they feel about working with parents or other family members? Do they find satisfaction in working with children but frustration in working with parents? This isn't an unusual dichotomy, but it will be problematic further down the road.

Question - 10:

Explain me what is the one thing that you keep a constant lookout for when assuming the role of an infant teacher?

Ans:

While an infant teacher needs to be hands-on in many areas, it is her prime responsibility to ensure that children are kept safe at all times. I make sure that all the children under my care are well looked after.

Question - 11:

As you know teaching a group of very young children is extremely challenging. Why did you not opt to work as an elementary or high school teacher?

Ans:

I believe that my strengths lie more in nurturing young minds than dealing with older ones. Since nurturing is needed more at the preschool and daycare level, I chose to channelize my energies here.

Question - 12:

Suppose if I were to walk into your classroom during an early literacy or math activity, what would I see?

Ans:

This answer can be a bit lengthy, because you want to explain your intentional planning and the activity's learning goals. Speak at a steady pace and stay on topic, and the length won't be a problem. Your answer depends on the children you would be teaching and your teaching style's fit with their unique characteristics. Are you leading a small group, working one-on-one, or working with the whole group? Explain how you would get the children interested at the beginning of the activity. During the activity, what will you be doing? How will you end the activity? Think about your teaching strategies, and tie them in with the curriculum (typically found on the program or district website). Using the name of the curriculum shows interviewers you are interested in their school or program and that you researched it.

Question - 13:

Can you tell us professionally, in what areas would you most like to develop? What skills would you like to learn?

Ans:

If you're tired of the old "tell me your strengths and weaknesses," give this question a try. This will tell you about their interests and their capacity for self-reflection. You might want to weigh how enthusiastically they answer the question. Do you pick up that they're hesitant to try new things or haven't given much thought to their growth at work? A quick answer on their part may mean they've already given some serious thought to their own professional development. Also you can compare their proposed area of growth with the current and future needs of the program. If they received education/training in their desired area, how would that help your program?

Question - 14:

Explain me would you please do a 10-minute written observation on one of our children? How would you go about assessing a child and gathering information for a parent conference?

Ans:

It is a fairly common practice to have a prospective teacher come in and teach for a morning in order to see them at work. However, you should consider also asking them to perform a written observation on a specific child. When they are done you'll not only have a sample of their writing (no, they won't have to time to correct their work) but you'll be able to have a glimpse of what they see when they look at children in the program. Do they catch nuances of emotional displays by the child? Do they notice how a child connects with other caregivers or children? What have they said about how a child uses a specific toy? Gathering and sharing information about the child with the parent is a critical function of every teacher. As the applicant answers this question try to determine what observation skills and techniques they've used successfully. Find out if, in their previous jobs, was there time to do observations, or will this be a fairly new skill to them that they'll need to develop? What, if any, observation tools have they used? You may use a specific tool in your program and you'll want to try to gauge how much training you'll need to do.

Question - 15:

Explain me what have been the most formative experiences you've had in your work with young children and families? Which ones were the most important to you and why?

Ans

This question is a variation of the classic "tell us about your previous work experience and education" and I like it better because it should tell you more than you'll find on their resume. When I ask this question I'm listening not just to find out where they've worked and what they've done, I'm asking what they got out of those experiences. Have they grown with each job experience, and how? Hopefully I'll know if their experiences fit with what we do and if there's a solid foundation to build on. If they answer with a recitation of what's on their resume then I ask them to clarify further what happened at that job that significantly affected how they now work with children and families. Let them tell you which of their previous experiences were important. Finding out which jobs weren't helpful to their growth and why can also be revealing.

Question - 22:

Can you explain what strategies do you use to encourage children to work in groups?

Ans:

Group work allows students to interact and stay engaged. The interviewer is inquiring how you go about incorporating that into the classroom. "I have a few strategies I use to encourage my preschoolers to work in groups. I am adamant about sticking to hands-on activities only, which are more likely to turn into a group activities versus individual work. Also, I like to take activities that can be done on an individual basis and turn them into group work. For example, in my previous position instead of having each student draw a separate picture, I allowed them all to work on a collaborative mural that hung on our wall for the remainder of the year. It encouraged team work and open communication among the students."

Question - 23:

Can you tell me some of your positive guidance strategies?

Ans:

Be sure the strategies you describe are developmentally appropriate and effective. It is best to share ones that you have implemented successfully, so you can use examples from your own experiences. Administrators seem to appreciate discussing guidance that reinforces positive behaviors and involves children in deciding how to work together in the classroom.

Question - 24:

Tell us as far as skills are concerned, what are the basic skills that one needs in order to be a successful infant teacher?

Ans:

Where little children are concerned, there is really no such thing as basic skills. All the skills that an infant teacher possesses have to be profound. These would include the ability to work with children while maintaining a "level" with them, exceptional patience, great insight into how a child's mind works, and deep understanding of infant care principles and procedures.

Question - 25:

Suppose if you were to operate your own program, what do you consider key elements in a high quality operation that you would be sure to include?

Ans:

This is a little like asking "Tell me everything you know" about quality early childhood education. Obviously no one can fully answer this question in the few minutes allotted to each question, but their selection of what they mention and, perhaps even more importantly, what they forget or leave out will tell you a lot about their values and perspectives as a teacher. You, of course, must be clear about your values and priorities in your program in order to determine if the candidate is a good match. I know that I like to hear each candidate include health and safety first and foremost. While we may all like to hear them explore the more exciting areas of curriculum, parent work, diversity, etc., if they don't start the job with an awareness of safety, the rest doesn't matter too much because you may have hired an accident waiting to happen. I'm also looking for them to talk about more than the children. What do they have to say about their relationship with and the role of the parents in their classroom? What do they mention about supporting the home culture? How do they develop curriculum? Have they talked about positive and healthy relationships with their co-workers? This question can also be a lead-in to more follow-up questions about specificskills. Take good notes as they answer this question so you can review it and compare with your own list later on.

Question - 26:

Please explain how do you handle working with children of different age groups?

Ans:

Most likely as a preschool teacher you will be working with students from ages three to five. The interviewer wants to make sure your curriculum will be relevant to the entire range of age groups.

"The most important thing I keep in mind when working with children of different age groups is to keep each child engaged and mentally stimulated. Everyone must have equal attention because often if a child feels neglected they will start to act out. All students physical, emotional, cognitive and social needs should be met and further developed. I make sure to keep a diverse curriculum that is specified and beneficial to each age. I develop cross-age activities as well."

Question - 27:

Explain me how do you plan to communicate with families?

Ans:

Your answer should reflect the culture of the community in which you are interviewing. Find out the home languages spoken, the economic status of most families, and the kinds of family involvement encouraged by the school or program. Knowing these details, you can shape a response that demonstrates respect for the families. Would it make more sense to use email or to send letters home? Would it be beneficial to create a class website? Is there a teacher portal available? Be sure to mention that you chose a method because you are aware of the community demographics!
