Customer Service Interview Questions And Answers Guide.

Question - 1:

How would you handle if a co-worker is rude to customers?

Ans:

That would depend on what kind of a rapport I had with him. If I felt comfortable, I would probably mention that being rude is probably going to be bad for him in the long run, since unhappy customers reflect badly on the sales associate. Otherwise, I would mention to the supervisor what I had witnessed and let him handle it.

Question - 2:

How would you handle the negative comments from the angry and frustrated customers?

Ans:

Show your warm, friendly and professional character. Only express it and do not tell your customers about that. Keep it in mind and you should demonstrate your ability in controlling and your power so that you are authorized to make dialogue (while your listening skills are maintained) and you will not be bull dozed or effected by the sentiment of the complainant.

Question - 3:

How do you advise the customer if a customer does not know what he needs and comes to you for an advice about the product?

Ans:

In order to find out what product characteristic or other demands which the customer requests, I make some related questions. It is usually useful to make a conversation, so you can examine any special requests or preferences. Once I receive that information, I will tell the customer some ideas and show how they satisfy the customer's needs. Customers only have lots of information. This information can come to customers from different sources, and it is normally not able to say which product is the one they want. Through the conversation, the customer can express their expectations from the product and up to them, you can give the exact advice.
